Collectivizing Urban Knowledge

Working together

The Urban Knowledge Collective wants to form a community of international urban actors – with and by you! As a non-profit association founded by students of urban research programs we believe that the multi-layered urban issues cities face today can only be tackled by 'thinking and acting beyond' national and municipal boundaries.

Together we want to open up and perpetuate the exchange of city-specific knowledge pools. Whether you are a student, alumni, practitioner, activist, NGO, university, research institute or enthusiast – you assemble a lot of local, all-day-life and academic knowledge you can share!
In order to enable international urban actors to work (together) we want to build a digital platform that...

... enables the common-good-oriented exchange of skills and expertise.
... helps to find allies in the quest for socially just and environmentally sustainable cities.
... provides opportunities to engage in meaningful urban work.

We invite you to collaboratively design working processes with, by and for urban actors and urbanists. Be part of the working groups communicating, conceptualizing, organizing and funding – for common-good-oriented urban realities!

Join in for getting organzied on the 1st of July 6 pm via Zoom and for any questions or thoughts write us an email to info@urbanknowledge.eu

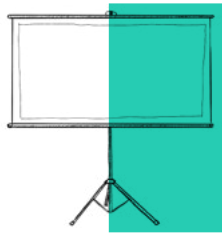
conceptualizing

How can we create caring and cooperative working structures in this competitive world? How can we translate them into a digital platform for urban work? We want to establish a digital platform built on exchange of individual knowledge, research, skills, meaningful work opportunities and more.
If you are interested in conceptual thinking (plus making it real): Come over and join the discussion.

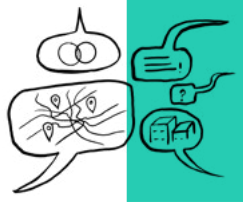


funding

The sad reality of any organisation is that one needs some money to operate. Are you a good-with-numbers-type? Do you like coming up with new project ideas and embedding them within a narrative? Let's identify funding opportunities collectively and keep the (common-) good work running.

organizing

To search and find common-good-oriented forms, we need to get in touch with different perspectives, positions and people. And to do this, we need to open up and rethink the process "of getting in touch". Do you want to discuss your master thesis or put a workshop idea into practice? We share ideas for workshops, develop webinars together and organise UKC projects.



communicating

Another urban network blabla? Yes, indeed. We want to bring together urban actors to connect, to contextualize and to change urban realities. With a variety of communication channels at hand, some people with expertise and some without, we collectively develop a strategy for public relations.
